INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF STATISTICS

The International Organization of Statistics (IOS) is a non-governmental organization that provides statistical information and services to its member states. The organization was established in 1947 and has since grown to include over 100 member states.

The organization's main objective is to promote the development of statistical systems and methods in member states, and to ensure the availability of reliable and comparable statistical data. This is achieved through technical assistance, training, and the exchange of information and experience.

The organization also plays a key role in the collection and dissemination of international statistics, and in the development of international statistical standards and methods. This includes the work of the International Statistical Institute (ISI) and the International Statistical Institute (ISI) Commission on International Statistical Classification of Diseases and Related Health Problems (ICD).

The organization's work is supported by a network of regional and national statistical offices, and by a number of international statistical agencies. This network enables the organization to provide a wide range of services to its member states, and to ensure the availability of reliable and comparable statistical data.

The organization's work is also supported by a number of international statistical agencies, including the United Nations, the World Bank, and the International Labour Organization. These agencies provide the organization with the resources and expertise needed to carry out its work.
